Managing kids who won't take no for answer

Kids can be very strategic at getting you to agree to what they want. But two can play at that game!

Ever had a child who keeps asking for a favour or a treat over and over until they get the response they want?

These kids generally use one of two strategies. They may either nag or hound you until they get an affirmative response or they seek out another adult who will give them the answer they want.

Pester power wears you down!

From a kid's point of view, the first method, which is based on persistence, is generally very effective with tired parents and sole parents who are more vulnerable to this type of behaviour.

"All right have the ice cream. Anything for some peace and quiet," is a response that most people who have spent time around children are familiar with. The same applies to adolescents: "Okay, you can go to the party. Just stop nagging me about it!"

Playing one parent off against the other

The second method is a little more devious but very effective and usually occurs in dual parent families. You know the situation. A child's request for a treat, favour or outing is turned down for good reason ("No Jessica you can't have an ice cream now. Wait until after dinner"). The child then goes to the other parent (without sharing the conversation they've just had with you!) in the hope that he or she may well give them the positive answer they are looking for.

These situations can drive parents crazy and are indicative of two people operating on different parenting planes.

If it happens every now and again then it is no big deal. However, if one parent is always granting a child his or her wishes without consultation or thought about what the other parent thinks, then it's probably time to step back and reflect on how you can both work better together.

One "no" is enough

Be firm with a child or young person who goes to another parent in search of a 'yes' after they have received a knock back.

"Where did you get that ice cream from? I already said no."

"Daddy said I could have it."

"I am sorry but you should not go to Daddy after I said 'No'."

If in doubt, defer

The other technique that you can use when one parent tends to give in more often is to agree to defer to each other whenever a child or young person asks something tricky.

"Okay Jessica, I'll just check with Dad and get back to you."

This strategy can be wearing and even artificial but it's helpful in bringing the other parent into the picture and it also demonstrates that you are double act.

It's the smartest way to manage teens as they have a propensity to corner you into making quick decisions. The principle here is to control the timing of your responses and not be railroaded into snap decisions.

Take it in turns saying "no"

Most dual parents play good cop/bad cop, with one being the disciplinarian or hard-line manager and the other more the play director. That tends to be the way of families. This is wearing on the bad cop so it helps if you can swap roles (or even backbones) occasionally so that the 'bad cop' parent gets a break. Sole parents play both roles, which is draining.

Managing children who won't take no for an answer demands teamwork, a willingness to hold your ground and, most importantly, good communication skills. The aim is to reach a point that when you say "No, not this time" (or however you say it), your kids actually believe what you say.
